I used ChatGPT to generate the image, just because it's the model that I'm most familiar with. It did a good job of creating a pretty realistic image of a tasty-looking pizza in a short amount of time (generative AI is nothing if not convenient). It's kind of crazy how much power generative AI gives us; it's now easy to get a fast, easy-to-use, non-copyrighted, professional-looking image in a matter of seconds. There's no need to spend time, skill, or money on art. It's wildly helpful, I've used it countless times for projects like these, but when it starts to be used on a professional level I feel like it makes the future of art a little uncertain.
