Once again I asked ChatGPT to create an image of a slice of pizza, this time with randomly placed toppings, a title in the top left corner, and some kind of animation. The result it came up with was interesting. The “pizza” shape wasn’t exactly right and it made the mushrooms, pepperoni, and olives overlap with each other which created a weird sort of effect when the draw function ran. But it used a lot of different techniques, a lot of which I didn’t know about, and it created the whole thing in seconds. It was cool to give the AI a prompt that was a little more complicated and then see what it did in relation to my own work. Some of what we did was the same, including some of the mistakes.
